

With current technology, there is no reason (except the underlying agenda to subject everyone to the same smut) a system could not be put into place where individuals could pick the stations entering their home, and thereby keep objectional material out if unwanted. Although it seems to not matter...even when watching "Andy Griffith," the commercials are so inappropriate that channels have to be changed.